What values are most important to you, your family, your organization?

First identify what is most important to you: Family, career, hobbies, friends, health, etc.

If you are struggling to determine this, ask yourself: What came to mind first, before anything else?

Next, identify the time/times when you have felt the happiest and most alive:

- What were you doing, or what did you do to reach that feeling?
- Were you alone? With people? Was someone else included?
- Was a device part of your happiness?

Now, identify when you were the most proud of yourself:

- Why were you proud? What contributed to you reaching that feeling?
- If you were not proud of yourself, who were you proud of?
- Did a device contribute to this feeling?

Lastly, identify what you desire to be remembered for:

- Is it something regarding your career? A hobby? A volunteer organization?
- Is it something only a certain family member or friend would remember?
- Is it a quality that you evoke or inspire in others?
- Another way to think of this is: What do I not want to be remembered for. Then list the opposite. Notice if devices are part of this list.

From these questions, you should have a direction on what your values are such as:

- Devotion to family or a friends?
- Trustworthiness in everything you do?
- Discipline to a career or staff?
- Achieving balance of mind and soul?
- Being the best at social media? Having the most followers?

If you are struggling to determine your values, Mind Tools has an alphabetical list of personal values.
